Excerpt of pertinent information

... Vilume was astonished that King Mihai had not adopted a more categorical attitude toward General Radescu and that he has not demanded more discipline from a soldier.

Vilume said that he believed that General Radescu's appointment as President of the Rumanian National Committee was due to the U. S. Government desire to have at the head of the Committee the last constitutional Prime Minister. But, apart from this fact in his favor, General Radescu did not seem to be an important political personality. Radescu was only Prime Minister for a short time and cannot impress people abroad as do more striking personalities like Constantin Visolani and Grigore Gafencu. . . .
